Country Chic

Step inside the Brentwood Country Mart, built in 1948, and you're instantly transported to a time when a post office, barbershop, cobbler, and pub made for a town. The original long red barn, replete with white trim and arched walkways, is a charming architectural contrast to the tony Brentwood enclave. Stroll down narrow passageways connecting high-end, independently owned boutiques such as Turpan (everything from cashmere throws to eco-friendly cleaning supplies), Apartment Number 9 (with men's labels such as Trovata and Seize Sur Vingt), Calyppo, and the Monogram Market, and leading to two cobblestoned courtyards filled with a handful of picnic tables and benches surrounding a fire pit, given to the original owners by the community as a one-year-anniversary present. On any given weekend, you'll find locals and families of all ages eating chicken and fries from Reddi Chick (the best rotisserie recipe in town) and burgers and salads from Barney's. The Country Mart is still one of the best-kept secrets in L.A. —PUNCH HUTTON
